ABSTRACT

In the fall of 1973, De Anza College conducted a nationwide survey of institutional research in 2-year colleges. Questionnaires were sent to every 2-year educational institution in the United States. About 45 percent were returned. Part of the purpose of this survey was to compile a directory of research personnel. This directory is the result. It contains over 350 separate entries, and includes 2-year colleges from all 50 states. (Author/DB)

NATIONAL DIRECTORY OF TWO-YEAR COLLEGE INSTITUTIONAL RESEARCH OFFICES

In the Fall of 1973, De Anza College conducted a nationwide survey of institutional research in two-year colleges. Questionnaires were sent to every two-year educational institution in the United States. About 45% were returned. Part of the purpose of this survey was to compile a directory of research personnel. It was thought that such a directory would help research people keep in touch with one another, provide a ready mailing list for future community college studies, and facilitate an exchange of research information.

This Directory is the result. It contains over 350 separate entries and includes two-year colleges from all fifty states. You will note that often the person named as responsible for institutional research has another primary function at his college. But more and more we are finding that colleges are making institutional research a full-time function for one or more personnel.

If the response to this first effort is good, we shall endeavor to keep the list up to date and to revise it on a yearly basis. Incidentally, if you were not included and would like to be added to the Directory, write to the Institutional Research Office, The Learning Center, De Anza College, Cupertino, Calif., 95014

Foreword

During the past decade or so, the value of institutional research in the community college has slowly but steadily come to be appreciated. There are many evidences for this; e.g., in California, the tenth annual 3 day conference of community college researchers, the establishment and growth of the ERIC Clearinghouse on Junior Colleges, the formation of a junior college special interest group in the American Education Research Association (AERA), the participation of junior colleges in the Association for Institutional Research (AIR), to name a few.

Community and junior college administrators and faculty are realizing the worth of the assistance that a functional institutional research office can provide in such areas as program evaluation, trend identification, student placement, measurement of campus opinions, needs assessment and many others.

One of the greatest needs of a research officer is that of communication with his peers in other colleges. The ERIC Clearinghouse for Junior Colleges has provided invaluable assistance in making available current research studies and other pertinent materials. Until the publication of this directory, however, the college research officer has not had available the name of a specific person at each college with whom he could communicate regarding his specific needs and desires. The compilers of the directory are to be commended for their efforts in this initial listing and their plans for keeping it up to date. Those of us in the field are in their debt, and I am sure can best show appreciation by making extensive use of their product.

This will at least acknowledge in a small way the many hours of card collecting, organization, and typing done by Sally Wilson-Haff. Without her assistance, this project never would have been completed.
